Mercury secures prominent London building

The latest project from Mercury systems was for a building very familiar with many people working in and visiting London. Public safety, access and the high spec of the technological challenge were all in the mix for this demanding brief.

Mercury were awarded the contract to replace the existing security system with an industry leading CCTV network that will give the building's security teams the ability to protect and manage the site, in addition to the surrounding roads and roof! But the challenge didn't end there! During the project the brief more than doubled in size – but Mercury's installation team were more than happy to adapt designs, schedules and infrastructure to accommodate these.

It wasn't just the requirements for technology, but the location and purpose of the building that came with its own demands. Mercury had to work within very strict protocols which included gaining permits to shut down streets around the building itself in order to carry out this highly confidential project. The team worked tirelessly to ensure that they delivered on time and on budget.

Mercury's Operations Director commented:

"This project was an incredible opportunity to demonstrate the technological capabilities of our cutting edge CCTV technology. The high profile nature of the job meant that we could utilise our expertise to its full potential. The client and our team were thrilled with the results!"

Mercury delivered:

- 185 cameras
- Full independent network installation
- 4 client PCs with remote viewing
- Video walls
- Main control room including consoles and furniture that comply with all health and safety ergonomics & requirements for 24 hr operations
- Backup control room
